Biography: Grace Tatigian has strong background in writing and editing, including everything from technical writing to marketing communications.

She graduated from Memorial University with an honours degree in English, a minor in French, and a diploma in professional writing in 2014. She has worked at two publishing houses, Memorial University Press and Shoreline Press in Montreal. She has also worked with two professors during her undergrad, copyediting academic articles for publication.

Between her bachelor's and master's degrees, she worked at a national clothing company as a translator and copywriter for over three years.

In that time, she handled the company's internal and external communications, including website content, marketing emails, social media, and memos.

Currently, she works as the Managing Editor at Wood Industry where she is responsible for the bilingual editorial content of the quarterly magazine and weekly e-digest.
