Biography: I live on the Southwest Coast of Newfoundland in the small oceanfront community of Isle aux Morts — a place defined by rugged beauty, deep history, and stories carried on the wind. Known for shipwrecks dating back beyond the 1800s, the coastline has long been a source of resilience and legend, and it continues to inspire my writing today.

As both an author and artist, I find creative spark in everyday life: in nature, in conversation, and in quiet moments of reflection. For more than twenty years, I've explored how storytelling — whether written or visual — can connect memory, imagination, and lived experience. In 2012, I established Art by JoAnn Goosney, expanding my creative work through online platforms, retail partnerships, and markets across the region.

I've collaborated with companies, organizations, and individuals on projects that require clarity, planning, and strong communication. A thoughtful process and reliable time management have always guided my work, allowing me to stay focused, on schedule, and true to the story I want to tell.

My writing is shaped by place, memory, and the enduring pull of the Atlantic — and by the belief that stories, like coastlines, are always evolving.
